Chief Editor's note on behalf of the Editorial Board

I am glad to present to you, Volume 1(1) of this journal which is open source but with no article publication charges (APC). The first issue of the bi-annual journal carries research articles on non-linear fluid mechanics, all authored by some of the editorial board members and their associates. The peer-reviewed, well-formatted and plagiarism-checked articles symbolize the standard of the journal and is meant to let researchers, especially youngsters, know what we expect in the papers that they shall submit online to subsequent issues of this journal. The focus of this dedicated, first-of-its-kind journal is entirely on nonlinear fluid mechanics. With the aim of getting the journal indexed in the shortest possible time, all standard editorial support is provided and good practices have been followed to give the authors and the readers the experience that top-notch journals provide.

I solicit your cooperation and support in making this journal a foremost one in the field by promoting it to budding and top-class researchers world-wide. Your feedback on improving the editorial experience with this journal is most welcome. Original research articles and review articles in the area of nonlinear fluid mechanics covering experimental, theoretical, computational and simulation aspects shall be considered for publication. Thank you in anticipation for getting on board!
